SECOND QUARTER EXHIBITION

"Colors of the Universe"

May 17- July 27, 2014

with the art of
WILLIAM STRIPP
in the Artists' Quarter

Opening
Sunday, May 18, 3-5 PM

Colors of the Universe

When I was in elementary school at Our Lady of Sorrows, I got straight "A"s, except for art and penmanship, which I consistently failed. In my freshman year in a liberal arts college, my art teacher told me that he wouldn't fail me. Instead, he would give me a "C" if I promised never to try to draw or paint again. I didn't promise, but he gave me a "C" anyway. My paintings are my thumbs in the eyes of the penguins and my art professor. I have seen a shade of green in a traffic light in Pittsburgh that opened my eyes to the colors of the universe. My paintings are political statements, social commentary, and stand up comedy. My ultimate goal is to be able to create paintings that make people hallucinate without doing psychedelics. When you pass through to the next phase of your existence you will see my paintings on your path to becoming stardust in a distant galaxy.

Gregg Daigle Band

Continued

Gregg Daigle’s own life has taken him from the bustle of the Northeast to the serene vistas of New Mexico; his musical journey has seen him travel similarly wide expanses. Like many pickers, it was rock n’ roll that initially put a guitar in Gregg’s hands; a keen ear and an open mind eventually led him to explore a varied cross-section of the acoustic music landscape, from classical to Gypsy jazz. However, it was the rootsy sounds of Bill Monroe and bluegrass that would leave the deepest mark, evident in the strains of acoustic guitar, banjo, and mandolin that abound throughout all twelve tracks of Seize the Hay.

The Gregg Daigle Band represents a true convergence of these seemingly disparate musical paths. Drummer Carlin Venaglia and bassist Jon McMillan provide a solid rhythmic foundation upon which Gregg and keyboardist/vocalist Chris Plourde build robust melodies and harmonies – music that is at once instantly accessible but replete with hidden nuances that reward repeated listening. The title track is a case in point. The story is familiar – a Midwestern family working hard to keep the farm productive. Through thoughtful dynamics and a seamless blending of acoustic and electric tones, the band infuses the lyrics with a sense of time and space. Days turn to nights. Seasons pass. Children grow. Gotta make hay.

With or without lyrics, The Gregg Daigle Band always has a story to tell. Instrumental compositions like “Twenty-Nine Wishes” and “River Dogs” provide not only a showcase for the band’s understated virtuosity, but a sonic vision of places visited and lives lived. Guitar, banjo, and keys weave a rich musical tapestry that never meanders, endeavoring to connect with fellow musicians and casual listeners alike.

Like the ramblers, workers, and families it depicts, Seize the Hay is the product of minds and souls in motion – a band on a journey, eager to share the sights and sounds of a life well lived.

The SYMBIOSIS Performers perform

"Voice"

May 16th @ 6 PM

Students at Navajo Mid have been working all year with Language Arts teacher, OreOluwa Badaki, to answer these three essential questions:

1. What is my voice?
2. Why does my voice matter?
3. How can I effectively connect my voice with others?

Students have chosen to express their voice through dance, drama, and art. They will be performing an original play, original choreography, and original art work (for sale) and will share the inspirations behind their work both verbally and through the written word. This will be an opportunity for them to put actions to their words, to bring the lessons they learn in class to the "outside world", and to share their voice with you. We hope you will come and join us in this exploration of voice and consciousness.

The Creative Process, Improvisation and Taoist Philosophy

Offered by Gregory Myers, MFA
11 AM - 2 PM, Saturday, May 24th
Sliding Scale: $5-$25
All proceeds go to EMAAC

In this Playshop we shall explore the essence of the Creative Process and the use of improvisational techniques borrowed from a Performing Arts perspective couched within the Philosophy of Taoism as a means of exploring and igniting one's own creative potential.

While creativity is often thought of as an Artistic process, here we will explore creativity as problem solving. As such the tenets of creativity may be applied to virtually and problem or challenge. Sources to be explored include ideas from Rollo May's The Courage to Create, Eric Maisels's, Coaching the Artistic Within and Austin Klein's, Steal Like an Artist, as well as Stephen Mitchell's translation of Lao Tzu's, Tao Te Ching.

Please bring a sketch book of at least 9 x 12, pencils and a box of crayons. Wear loose comfortable clothing in which you wouldn't mind rolling about on the floor as we will be doing some movement exploration and breathing techniques.

Gregory received his MFA in Dance from Temple University and has taught Creative Process to youth and adults in a variety of educational forums.
